On Moral Policing
at 6.00 p.m. on Friday, 21st November, 2014
At HOTEL AIDA, Kottayam

Sreelekha is the first lady IPS officer from Kerala. She is a decorated officer, author and has also served as Managing Director for Public Sector Organisations in Kerala. Sreelekha completed her Bachelor's Degree in English Literature at the Women's College in Thiruvananthapuram. She then did her Masters at the University Institute of English in the Kerala University Campus. In 2005, she obtained MBA in Human Resource Management from IGNOU. Prior to joining the Police service, Sreelekha, worked as a lecturer at the Vidhyadhi Raja College. She also worked for the Reserve Bank of India, as an Officer in Mumbai. After joining the Police service, she served as District Superintendent of Police in 3 districts, Alappuzha, Pathanamthitta and Thrissur. Sreelekha also worked with the Central Bureau of Investigation for a short period as SP. She was then promoted to Deputy Inspector General of Police at Ernakulum Range. In 2005, Sreelekha was posted as the Managing Director of Kerala State Cooperative Rubber Marketing Federation. In June 2007, she was posted as the Managing Director of the Roads and Bridges Development Corporation of Kerala. Later on, she also served as the Inspector General, Crime Branch. She became ADGP, Vigilance, on 15 February 2014. She was one of the speakers at the 5th National Conference of Women in Police, organised by the Bureau of Police Research & Development in July 2012, and is also a strong advocate of gender parity in the Kerala Police force. From July 8th 2004. Right now she is the Transport Commissioner, Govt of Kerala.

In her speech she categorically said that in moral policing there is no moral or policing. In no way we can permit law being handled by miscreants. It is not permissible to take law activities for granted.
